

BOOK SYNOPSIS - MULTIPLE LENGTHS

ONE-LINE SYNOPSIS (20 words)

> He wanted a mentor. Instead, he got a stalker. After I gave him ideas worth over 100 million dollars, he stalked me and used my home as a weapon to destroy my life.

SHORT SYNOPSIS (50 words)

> It started with a single click in his wall. Then it became fifty clicks a day. Then his most private moments were mocked by a self-help guru who'd promised to transform his life.

>

> Twelve years later, Cole Pierce is still being stalked. This thriller, based on real events, is his desperate attempt to fight back with the only weapon he has left: the truth.

MEDIUM SYNOPSIS (100 words)

> Cole Pierce thought he'd found a mentor. A self-help guru who promised to transform his life. Instead, his home started clicking. Fifty times a day. From eight locations in his bedroom alone.

>

> Hidden cameras. Hacked devices. His most intimate moments watched, recorded, and mocked. When he confronted the man responsible, the response was chilling: "You're not going anywhere."

>

> Twelve years later, Pierce is still being stalked. He's moved ten times. The surveillance follows everywhere. With no money to fight in court and no physical bug to hand prosecutors, he's written this thriller as his only weapon.

>

> THE STALKER'S PROTOCOL is a work of creative nonfiction, but the evidence is real. The clicks are real. The nightmare is real. And the author is still living it today.

LONG SYNOPSIS (250 words)

THE STALKER'S PROTOCOL: How Duncan Stone Used Surveillance and Psychological Warfare to Destroy My Life

November 2014: Cole Pierce walked down his back stairs and heard an electrical click buried in the brick wall. He told himself it was nothing. Three days later, he found the first camera.

By then, they were everywhere. Behind the walls. Above his bed. In his car. His phone hacked. His computer compromised. Fifty clicks a day became the soundtrack of his life. Clicks came from eight different locations in his bedroom alone. His most private moments were watched, recorded, and mocked.

The man responsible was a millionaire self-help guru who'd promised to transform Pierce's life after Pierce impressed him with extraordinary gifts at a 2014 seminar. When Pierce applied for a job, the surveillance began. When he confronted the guru, the admission was chilling: "I told my staff to mess with you." Then he mocked Pierce's love life, proving he'd watched everything through those hidden cameras. His last words: "You're not going anywhere."

Twelve years later, Pierce is still being stalked. He's moved ten times. The surveillance follows everywhere. He has 247 videos of evidence, RF detector readings, recordings of thirty clicks in thirty minutes, and proof of man-in-the-middle attacks requiring on-site devices.

But he's never held a physical bug in his hand. The one he found retracted into his walls and vanished. Without a device for prosecutors, criminal charges are impossible. His stalker's lawyers bury every legal attempt. Law enforcement tells him to seek psychiatric help.

This thriller, based on real events, is his only weapon. A desperate act to fight a multimillionaire stalker with the truth. The names are changed. The ending is fictionalized. But the clicks are real. The nightmare is real. And the author is still living it today.